

Porcelain Figurine of Running Horse, by Korosten Factory, 1955-62.

Petite, stands approx. 3 ¼" tall to its highest point, the base is about 3 ½ x 1 ¼". A charming fanciful "polka dot" filly, frozen in mid-jump over a barrier reminding of the crest of a breaking wave. Maker marked on the bottom. This version of the logo of the Korosten Porcelain Factory was in use from 1955 to 1962 (fig. # 383 in Volume One of Marks on Soviet Porcelain, Faience, and Majolica, 1917-1991 by Nasonova et al).

In excellent, superb condition. No wear or damage visible to the naked eye.

The Korosten Porcelain Factory is located in the city of Korosten, Zhitomir Region, in the north-west of Ukraine. Its history goes back to 1909 when a Polish entrepreneur Timothy Przybylski started production of plain white porcelain dishes. The factory was nationalized by the Bolsheviks in 1918 but production was stopped for the duration of the Civil War. It resumed in 1924. By the end of 1940s, production moved towards more decorative and artistic items. The Soviet years were a golden era for Korosten Porcelain Factory but the free-market conditions and demands in the post-Soviet times, have put the factory's future at risk. In 2012, the factory stopped production and declared bankruptcy. But the administration of the factory did not hand in the proverbial towel. Later the same year, they worked out a plan of restarting production and offered their commercial plan to potential investors.
