Artillery Rangefinder With Tripod In Original Canvas Carrying Case, 1946.

The rangefinder measures approx. 7" x 5", and has fully functional optics, compass, and internal leveling device. The tripod is approx. 37" long when folded but extending its legs brings it to almost double that in height. Complete with canvas shoulder strap and a leather belt with buckle to wrap around the legs, for transportation and storage. The carrying case is approx. 38" long with the cap closed, complete with canvas flap, shoulder strap, and small leather belts on the cap to keep it closed. Please note that the carrying case is for the tripod alone, and would not close with the rangefinder mounted on the tripod.

Excellent condition. All lenses and dials appear to be completely functional. The lock of the compass needle works fine. The paint on the rangefinder looks fresh and shiny, showing just a couple of tiny chips. The tripod shows mild wear in the form of scuffs at the edges and chips to the paint, but all the wear is minor and purely cosmetic, not affecting the tripod's structural integrity or functionality. The canvas of the carrying case is mildly scuffed and stained, the leather of the foot and cap shows more wear but remains sturdy and fully functional.

This is a complete functional set in excellent condition, and will lend a whole different dimension to a display of WW2 field gear!
